burchten The reason why ch is considered to be one consonant is simple. Look what happens if we treat it as two consonants: a word like lachen would be divided as lac-hen. This completely changes the pronunciation of the separate syllables: as in English, the c at the end of a syllable is pronounced as k. We do get another problem, being the length of the vowel but we will get to that later.

In linguistics, and particularly phonology, stress or accent is relative emphasis or prominence given to a certain syllable in a word, or to a certain word in a phrase or sentence. This emphasis is typically caused by such properties as increased loudness and vowel length, full articulation of the vowel, and changes in pitch. The terms stress and accent are often used synonymously in this ...
