1. Introduction. This paper investigates the type of tax planning included in tax directors' compensation contracts. Using detailed data on tax director incentive compensation, we examine whether the incentives provided to tax directors are associated with lower effective tax rates and/or a wider book-tax gap. We also examine whether tax director incentives are more strongly linked to measures ...

The Community Charge, commonly known as the poll tax, was a system of taxation introduced in replacement of domestic rates in Scotland from 1989, prior to its introduction in England and Wales from 1990. It provided for a single flat-rate per-capita tax on every adult, at a rate set by the local authority. The charge was replaced by Council Tax in 1993, two years after its abolition was announced.
