Every man is limited in life by three things: (1) the knowledge of his own mind (2) the worth of his own character (3) the principles upon which he builds his own life. These things shape a man within, for better or worse. They define the quality of his life. Quality is always internal, not external.

Three Models of Manhood: In Search of Real Men. The picture of manhood that emerges out of this man is a familiar and widespread one: brute strength, inability to feel, absolute lack of capacity for neighbourliness, fear of change and on friendly terms with death. This is a model of manhood that is not to be imitated! The man of tombs is man turned death-wards.

Real Men Hugh LaFollette "Ah, for the good old days, when men were men and women were women. " Men who express such sentiments long for the world where homosexuals were ensconced in their closets and women were sexy, demure, and subservient. That is a world well lost --though not as lost as I would like. More than a few men still practice ...
