As a social event, a symposium was a drinking party that followed the evening meal. Hymns were sung, libations poured, and the drinking of wine, diluted by water, took place according to a planned procedure. Though some might choose not to imbibe, others would display considerable dissipation.

Pondus meum amor meus; eo feror quocumque feror.

While there is no agreement as to the proper role of values in the classroom, all of the authors viewed their teaching contexts as value-rich environments. The article also argues that the values themselves can serve as pointers toward a legitimate place for religious voices in the academy.
